Exceptional Service Driven by Design

We all know Paris as "The City of Lights," but we'd all agree we have our own illumination capital right here in the States: Las Vegas. Outdoor lighting displays are everywhere, one bigger than the next, one brighter than the next. But all competing for our attention as we walk the Strip, awestruck and sometimes overwhelmed, beckoning us to enter the casino, resort or hotel.

And then you step inside. Wynn Las Vegas, Encore, Bellagio, MGM Grand, The Mirage, Venetian/Palazzo, M Resort. You're immediately dazzled by the interior, the attention to detail and finely appointed décor. What pulls it all together, the crowning touch, is often the decorative lighting fixtures that grace these voluminous spaces and lend elegance, character and panache to each environment. It's this inspired and intricate design element that complements—and enhances—the scheme and captures the essence of the space.

For decades, two names, with careers both launched by Steve Wynn, have been synonymous with creating the interior lighting magic of Las Vegas: Alger International and Triton Chandelier, major players in hospitality and gaming, respectively. From the hotel lobby to the casino floor, the companies, independently, have led the industries. While Triton's history is built primarily on the local Vegas market and Alger International's on a broader, national base, both present a robust portfolio of clients including Marriott, Hyatt, Hilton, Four Seasons, Ritz Carlton, St. Regis and Westin to name a few. And while Triton's success is most notably grounded in service, and Alger is highly regarded for design innovation and material selection, it's what these two companies have in common that sets them apart from, and way ahead of, the competition. Each brings with it a solid history of experience. Each a successful business model and strong design philosophy. Each a name established by quality, craftsmanship, skill. And each, unparalleled leadership. Bring them together, and you've got a powerhouse.
